Angels Denis Johnson

Denis Johnson is a terrific writer and it is unfortunate that his masterpiece, "Angels", is overshadowed by 'Jesus' Son" - they are both splendid novels, but for me nothing beats the way this novel gets inside and tears you apart and it is subtle and sneaky about it.

Angels, Denis Johnson's 1983 debut novel, begins as a small book about not very much and ends as a small book about pretty much everything. Johnson has a keen eye and keener ear for the kinds of marginal characters many of us would rather overlook all together, people who live and sweat and suffer in the most wretched, unglamorous, and anti-heroic vistas of a decayed America.

Angels — Denis Johnson - Biblioklept

Johnson published three volumes of poetry before Angels came out in 1983, and that probably accounts for the care and control that characterizes his prose here. He writes a poet's prose, and the book he builds with it is a deeply impressive synthesis of Raymond Carver-like realism, American noir, and a mystically-powered poetic lyricism that's uniquely Denis Johnson's.

MINDFUL PLEASURES: ANGELS by Denis Johnson

— Denis Johnson, quote from Angels "It was all right to be who he was, but others would probably think it was terrible. A couple of times in the past he'd reached this absolute zero of the truth, and without fear or bitterness he realized now that somewhere inside it there was a move he could make to change his life, to become another person, but he'd never be able to guess what it was."

Denis Johnson obituary | Books | The Guardian

There are a handful of powerful episodes in Denis Johnson's debut novel, ANGELS. Among them is the 5:00 a.m. execution at the Arizona State Prison Complex at the end of the novel. The episode begins with a description of those who had come in their campers, motorcycles, and pick-ups and gathered across the highway from the prison to "seek warmth around the fire of murder".
