Sometimes inspiration for innovation is found in the past, as is the case with Patcraft's new Metal Collective collection. Borrowing from the centuries-old Japanese concept of Kintsugi in which broken pottery is put back together with lacquer that is mixed or dusted with metallic powder, the idea behind Metal Collective was to create something new by restoring broken and imperfect items.

The devices that users do own and see, such as smartphones and tablets, have become smaller and smaller. These devices are largely sealed as well—a typical smartphone, for example, is a thin, sleek case with a glass screen, with no external suggestion of the tightly packed chips, batteries, sensors, and so on that are inside that case.
